TOPIC: When We Do Something New

When performers and listeners experience the great musical classics, that performance is the result of great amounts of preparation; study, research, practice, rehearsal...familiarity.

But what about when it is not a well-known classic, but music that is brand new and being performed for the very first time? Is the preparation the same? Different?

This talk will address how conductors address new music; what they need to know and do to support the orchestra and inspire the audience.
